

Scott Huggins

As one half of the presenter team on BBC2's prime time international property relocation programme 'Get A New Life', Scott Huggins has become well known as a trusted and independent advisor on all aspects of the UK and international property markets. A property man before he was a presenter, Scott's skills and experience were integral to the development of Get A New Life, which is currently in its third series.

Further to a first class degree in Law and Business Administration and Management, Scott cut his teeth on the London Stock Exchange with W. Greenwells and the Citicorp subsidiary, Scrimgeur Vickers, but his interest in property led him to establish his own property management company in 1989.

It is Scott's in-depth knowledge of British and global property markets that has defined his role as the presenter of Get A New Life and clearly demonstrated his knack for monitoring current trends and anticipating patterns. His understanding of the underlying factors that affect these markets has become synonymous with his trusted reputation as an independent consumer advocate of the many property issues that currently obsess the UK media and public alike.

Scott has not only commented on property related issues for the BBC, but also ITV, The Mail on Sunday and numerous specialist titles.

In conjunction with his work as a presenter and journalist, Scott has recently launched Intrepid Investments, an innovative international property consultancy, which endeavours to offer a total service solution to potential investors interested in buying property overseas.

The company is distinguished by its endeavours to identify the world's most appropriate markets to deliver growth within an acceptable level of risk, and is specifically designed to think beyond the more traditional territories. Markets for consideration include China, India, Croatia, Turkey, The Baltic states and Costa Rica to name but a few.

Intrepid investments focuses upon actually taking investors to the country in question for hands-on research, specifically orientated around a programme of seminars by experienced local partners who include tax advisors, legal experts, finance providers, currency traders, estate agents & property developers.

As Scott remarks, "In spite of the growing disenchantment in domestic buy-to-let property investments and the overheated markets of more familiar foreign hot spots, essentially people still trust property as a great vehicle for their money. Whilst working throughout the world on Get A New Life, it became clear to me from first hand experience that a key barrier for most people to investing in property abroad is the difficulty in obtaining the appropriate knowledge and contacts to form considered decisions. Intrepid Investments intends to meet that challenge head on."
